1942 – 2007

Home

You; like an oak tree standing tall, your roots ran deep within the Earth.

Embedded values, you built your life around.

You immersed your soul in music, where the melodies moved your heart.

In the peaceful lullabies, the keys would sing to you.

You would swim your mind free; in the ocean you found solace.

The water a calming spirit that brought you energy.

You had a kitchen like a chapel, the counters were your alter, food like a communion made with loving hands.

You were a daughter, sister, wife, mother, aunty, nanna, friend, you were anchor to this circle, the bridges in these lives.

You lived a life in faith where love would drive out fear.

Listening to the sacred hymns in stained glass candlelight, where incense filled your senses with a soulful prayer of hope.

You are not scared of this journey.

You did not fear death.

You leave behind a legacy, only a mother can.
